Around the World

Zodiac cruising in the Naumeyer Channel, Antarctica.

Dear Traveller,

I'm thrilled to welcome you to Lindblad Expeditions, the world's longest-operating expedition cruise company. When my father, Lars-Eric Lindblad, led the first expedition to Antarctica for private citizens in 1967, he voyaged with a clear purpose: to help people deepen their connections to our wild planet. Since that inaugural journey, we have grown our portfolio to include more than 110 itineraries across all seven continents—and yet, our original mission still guides us. Every expedition is designed to fully immerse you in your destination.

You might be wondering what immersive travel means to us. To start, it means venturing to the absolute wildest places on Earth—legendary destinations like the Galápagos Islands and Alaska, as well as little-known shores and isles. It means building our vessels to be small and nimble, so that we can sail deeper into wilderness and disembark quickly for wildlife sightings. It means celebrating your destination on board through fine food, regional artwork, and local music. And it means collaborating with pioneers like National Geographic, so that you can travel with their brilliant photographers and modern-day explorers. Above all, immersive travel means putting you—our guest—at the centre of your experience. Discovery looks different to everyone, and we want you to explore at your own pace and through the lens that interests you, whether that is wildlife, photography, history, or whatever else moves you to travel.

We have honed our approach to expedition cruising over 50 years so that you can have the most transformative experience possible aboard the Lindblad Expeditions-National Geographic fleet. And we continue to strive to perfect that approach. Sustainable initiatives are central to these efforts—together with our guests, we have invested more than $22 million in conservation projects in the places we explore.

I'd also like to share our future plans for National Geographic Orion. Beginning in 2025, the ship will be sailing to the Mediterranean, and beyond on a series of enriching new voyages that reveal these regions' lesser-known treasures through the unique lens of Lindblad Expeditions-National Geographic.

We know you have a choice of travel operators, and we hope you choose to explore with us—to forge a deeper relationship with our world alongside a like-minded community of passionate explorers.

I hope you choose to join us out there soon.

Sincerely,

Sven-Olof Lindblad

New Horizons for National Geographic Orion

We are thrilled to announce that National Geographic Orion will chart a new course in 2025, taking travellers on a series of immersive expeditions to destinations both new and known to our fleet, from the Mediterranean to the Caribbean.

The 2025 arrival of National Geographic Orion in the Mediterranean marks an exciting chapter in our travels: the long-awaited return of our fleet to Turkey, with the voyage Crossroads of the Ancient World: Exploring Greece and Turkey. We'll also discover a timeless destination through a new perspective on Greek Isles Odyssey: Mythology, History, and Cerulean Seas, which journeys to storied and secret shores—from iconic Santorini to fabled Serifos—for an in-depth exploration of Cycladic culture.

Venture to emerging European destinations on Treasures of the Adriatic: Croatia's Dalmatian Coast and Montenegro to discover one of the continent's most enchanting rivieras, where Venetian towns meet lush forests and turquoise seas. Or, delve into legendary empires and iconic landmarks on Ancient Mediterranean Odyssey: Exploring Greece, Croatia, and Albania.

National Geographic Orion also continues her rich tradition of journeying to distant shores, from the Azores to Madeira; and lesser-known Caribbean islands like Antigua.

A New Way to Discover Antarctica: Fly the Drake Passage

Our upcoming Antarctic travel season offers guests exciting new ways to experience the wonders of the White Continent with four time-efficient itineraries that fly over the Drake Passage.

As the pioneers of polar expedition travel, Lindblad Expeditions-National Geographic deeply understands the life-changing nature of an Antarctic voyage—and we are continuously seeking out ways to introduce more people to the grandeur at the bottom of the globe. With the introduction of these itineraries that allow travellers to save time by flying over the Drake Passage in one or both directions, we invite you to chart a new course with us to the world's last great wilderness.

The runway on King George Island

Aboard the intimately scaled and guest favourites National Geographic Explorer Orion, embark on a 8, 9 or 10-Day Antarctica Direct: Fly the Drake Passage voyage, which takes you by air to and from the continent. On this option, guests will voyage to the continent aboard National Geographic Explorer, and fly back to South America at the end of their journey.
